The Added Value of Partnerships in Research: Effectively Engaging Communities and Patients

Join us for this free webinar to find out how building partnerships can positively impact your research.

WEBINAR GOAL

Engaging communities and patients throughout the study process can positively impact health research, particularly when addressing complex health problems. These partnerships can also increase competitiveness in research grant applications, as patient and community engagement is a growing expectation among funders. Despite researchers' interest in building partnerships, they are often uncertain of effective approaches for engagement. Researchers may also be unaware of the most appropriate levels of community or patient involvement in their research, with variations in strength and intensity.

This webinar is free and open to all.
